WHY HOUDON WAITED.

The Story Is Told In the Sculptor's Statue of Washington. One of the most valuable and in-

One of the most valuable and in-teresting collections of colonial rel-But I stopped for a moment, perhaps not too ics in existence is in the state library at Richmond.

The greatest treasure in the collection is the marble statue of Wash- 1st ington, by Houdon. It possesses the merit of being the only effigy that But away from my vowing I was rudely remains of Washington that was actually taken from life. The statue
The color I were with the landscape matched.

And that would, alas! never do. conveys a very distinct idea of Washington, different in many re- And now among the blue lilles affent spects, however, from the familiar portraits which for the most part are copies of the same original. In 1784, five years before the adoption of the federal constitution, the general assembly of Virginia ordered this statue.

When the statue was provided for, Thomas Jefferson happened to be in Paris, and he engaged Houdon as the sculptor, because, as he afterward said, "He is, without a rivalship, the first statuary of his age, as the proof of which he received orders from every country for things intended to be capital." Houdon received 1,000 English guineas, a trifle over $5,000. Besides, the expense of the journey from France to Virginia was paid, and his life was insured during his absence from France at the cost of the general assembly. Hondon left Paris in August, 1785. In October he reached Mount Vernon. He was treated with great consideration by Washington until the formality of his first meeting wore away.

Houdon made known no desire to get to work at the statue, and it is believed that Washington's hospitality grew a trifle cold before the sculptor really set about the work for which he had come over the sea. One morning while the family, of which Houdon had become temporarily a member, was seated at breakfast, a message was brought to Washington, informing him that a pair of carriage horses had been brought for his inspection, he having made known his desire to purchase a team. Washington left the table presently and went outside. Houdon followed. After a moment's close inspection Washington asked the price of the animals.

"One thousand dollars," was the reply.
"One thousand dollars!" said

Washington, in amazement.

"Ah, I 'ave him! I 'ave him! broke in Houdon gleefully. He hurried away and began work on the statue industriously, and so it is supposed that the expression preserved on the statue at Richmond is the one that appeared on the face of Washington when he learned of what he considered an exorbitant price for the span of horses. With the knowledge of this little incident in seeing the statue, it is not hard to believe that Houdon "had him" Ginley, the last two partners trading as Fleet, McGinley, to all the creditors of said southern immeration, Land and Title Company and other parties in interest.

You are kereby notified that I have fixed and the lips are compressed. It seems that Houdon, after he got the inspiration he had been waiting for, pursued the work faithfully, gaining Washington's interest and good will by his perseverance and industry.-Harper's Weekly.

A POSTER TRAGEDY. A purple moment of bright blue bliss Was mine, oh, green haired maid, When from your lips a yellow kiss I sipped in the dark red shade.

The eeru moon hung on a tree, We sat by a vertical brook.
You were a laughing in clive pink glee
And reading the edge of a book. And I was singing a lavender song,

And kissed you, I took perhaps two.

By the red hills topped with golden snow,
By the trees tearing holes in the sky,
I swore the red world I would overthrow For your love, or lie down and die.

And thrust far, far from you.

And now among the one fries about
